

Software

Do I Have a Products Liability Case Based on Defective Software?

Defective software claims, unlike many other products liability suits, are generally limited to economic losses and very rarely involve personal injuries. If you have suffered economic losses as a result of defective software, you may believe that you are entitled to sue to recover your damages. Not all damages, however, give rise to a legally valid cause of action. In order to determine whether you may have a claim, it is essential that you contact an experienced products liability or computer law attorney as soon as possible in order to preserve your rights and protect your interests. Your attorney will investigate your claim, and together you can make an informed decision as to whether to proceed with a lawsuit. The following information will aid your attorney in making that determination.

Use or submission of this form does not create an attorney-client relationship.

Name _____
Last First Middle Initial

Home address _____

If business losses were incurred, please provide the business name and address:

Your connection with this business (e.g., Owner, Partner, Shareholder, etc.) _____

Telephone numbers: Home (_____) _____

Business (_____) _____

Cell phone (_____) _____

E-mail address _____

Best time and method to reach you: _____

What type of software caused the injury?

Describe the software in detail: (include the exact name of the product, the manufacturer, any identifying product numbers, the date of manufacture, etc.)

Where did you purchase this software?

When did you purchase this software?

How long did you use the software before the losses occurred?

Was there any indication that you should discontinue use of the software before you did? If so, provide details.

Did you ever receive a recall notice relating to this software? If so, provide details.

Did you use the software according to all applicable instructions and did you heed all relevant warnings? If no, provide details.

Describe in detail how and when the losses giving rise to your claim occurred.

Describe in detail the nature and extent of your damages, including dollar amounts if available.

Thank you! Your responses will help ensure the best possible legal representation relating to your potential claim.